Course Overview

Aims

This professional multi-disciplinary Masters course in Fashion enables students to choose specialist study in fashion design, fashion writing and visual communication for fashion. As such, it prepares students to enter into the fashion industry in a range of roles. The course is underpinned by the core theoretical modules, Research Methods and Dissertation.

Students will choose one of the three specialisms: Fashion Design, Visual Communication and Fashion Writing. The specialism is chosen from the outset, and whilst multi-disciplinary work between these specialisms is possible, each is distinct from another. The course will appeal to students who wish to complete further study in one of these specialist areas and will equip them with the skills necessary to enter into employment.

The course aims:

- To produce highly motivated, adaptable, self-reliant and resourceful graduates
- To provide students with a learning experience that will enable them to work independently and creatively, developing their existing knowledge and expertise to produce innovative contributions to the fashion industry

- To prepare students professional practice within the fashion industry

Course Learning Outcomes

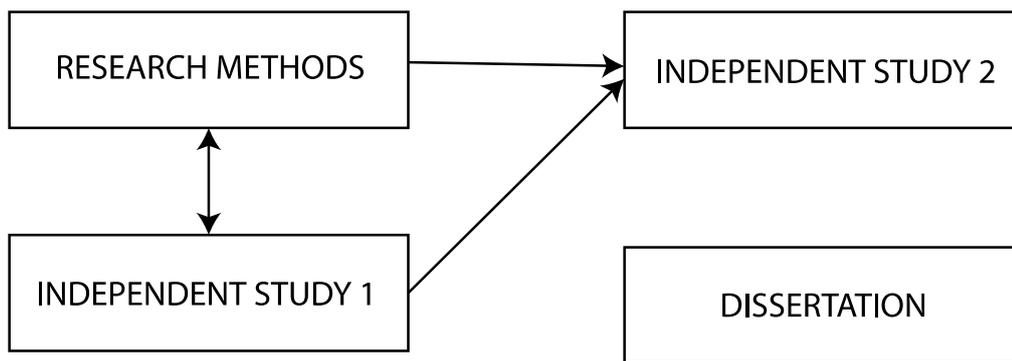

At the end of the course, students will be able to:

CL1: Research	Work autonomously to select, devise, apply and critically evaluate theoretical and practice-based research methods for an extended piece of self-directed personal research
CL2: Critical Analysis	Examine problems and issues related to the fashion industry critically and in detail using appropriate theoretical and practice-based research methods and strategies.
CL3: Technical	Select and effectively apply a range of complex theoretical and practice-based techniques and processes to novel situations to achieve innovative and experimental solutions for the fashion industry.
CL4: Communication	Select, use and modify appropriate styles and modes of communication for a wide range of tasks and purposes taking account of the audience within the fashion industry.
CL5: Professionalism	Demonstrate professionalism, such as time management and organisation, the ability to work independently and collaboratively where appropriate, with a self-critical awareness of the complex processes and outcomes within the fashion industry with sensitivity to equality, diversity and culture.

Teaching and Learning Activities

Summary

Learning is primarily focused upon project-based self-initiated research. Initial guidance is provided through the Research Methods module, which will introduce a variety of theoretical and practice-based research methods. The Research Methods module is taught alongside the Independent Study 1 module, with the latter being the vehicle in which students will explore pre-existing research skills and those explored in Research Methods. The Research Methods module culminates in the production of a detailed proposal for the module Independent Study 2. This is demonstrated in the diagram below, which shows the interplay between the Research Methods and Independent Study 1 modules, and how they link to the Independent Study 2 module.

All students will complete the core modules Independent Study 1 and Independent Study 2. These modules are taught in the groupings of Fashion Design, Visual Communication for Fashion and Fashion Writing to enable teaching and study in the chosen specialism. This also enables cross-specialism teaching and learning to happen, where appropriate. The Independent Study modules aim to broaden and challenge student's existing knowledge of their subject area. Through a wider knowledge of both their specialist route of study, the fashion industry, as well as a broader approach to art and design developed from the module Research Methods, students are encouraged to develop innovative and market aware, approaches to their specialist study. Emphasis is placed upon independent study, individuality, and creative approaches, with students expected to approach commercial design problems with an innovative and experimental outlook appropriate to their specialist study.

Methods of learning and teaching will vary depending upon the specialist study chosen by the student. The specialisms in Fashion Design and Visual Communication for Fashion are both entirely practice-based. Students completing these specialist routes will be taught via technical studio-based demonstrations, group critiques, studio talks led by staff, and visiting speakers from industry.

The specialism in Fashion Writing is predominantly lecture and seminar-based supported by individual tutorials, but may also include writing and media workshops where appropriate. Students will also have staff-led studio talks, and industrial speaker talks.

Students will be expected to demonstrate in-depth self-evaluation of their project-work, both in terms of its progress in relation to their research proposal, and the historic and contemporary professional context in which it has been produced.

The Research Methods and Dissertation modules are delivered via a combination of lectures and seminars. Students will be allocated seminar groups based upon their specialist study, which will enable them to develop their research in a more focused manner. The Research Methods lecture series is delivered across multiple PGT provision in the School. As such, it will reflect the multifarious and idiosyncratic approaches to theoretical and practice-based research across the subject areas of art, architecture and design in the School. The primary reason for this is to encourage a multi-discipline approach to research, whereby the focus for research may lie in a different subject area, which will in turn potentially encourage innovative approaches to the Independent Project modules.

Similarly, the Dissertation module is taught across a range of PGT provision in the School. In the first instance students will attend a lecture series relating to research skills specific to a range of dissertation modes. This will include a formal social sciences and humanities approach, as well as the more arts-based approach of a critical study. Following tutor advice, students will be able to choose which mode is the most appropriate. Lectures will be supported by subject and dissertation mode specific seminar groups, and individual tutorials.

The School uses two VLE's: CAGD and MyBeckett. The former is used for all practice-based modules due to its ability to upload multiple format large files, and the online feedback platform between staff and students that this affords.

The latter is used for lecture-based courses that require the use of Turnitin. As such, MA Fashion will utilise both VLE's. Students completing the Fashion Writing pathway are likely to entirely use MyBeckett, whereas those completing the other specialist pathways will use CAGD for their specialist, practice-based subjects and MyBeckett for the lecture based core modules Research Methods and Dissertation.

The course has a holistic approach to Blended Learning in that it encompasses a range of traditional and digital approaches to learning and teaching. This is particularly evident in the Fashion Design specialism as the demonstrations and workshops focus upon both traditional techniques, such as pattern-cutting, drawing and textile-based processes, along with digital processes, such as Adobe software demonstrations for visual communication.

Assessment Balance and Scheduled Learning and Teaching Activities

The assessment balance and overall workload associated with this course are calculated from core modules and typical option module choices undertaken by students on the course. They have been reviewed and confirmed as representative by the Course Director, but applicants should note that the specific option choices students make may influence both assessment and workload balance.

A standard module equates to 200 notional learning hours, which may be comprised of teaching, learning and assessment, any embedded placement activities and independent study. Modules may have more than one component of assessment.
