Course Overview

Aims

The aims of the course are to:

- Provide an inclusive education and training in therapeutic counselling and psychotherapy that meets the standards for professional recognition by the BACP.
- Offer a systematic and thorough education and training in integrative counselling via Relational approaches to therapeutic counselling and psychotherapy.
- Develop an advanced critical reflexive understanding of the theory, practice and research of counselling and psychotherapy.

Students gain a critical and comprehensive understanding of Relational theory and practice and learn how to apply therapeutic counselling and psychotherapy skills with clients. Through supervised practice, which follows the BACP core curriculum, students identify their strengths and areas for development, ensuring they become capable and self-reflective practitioners. The BACP advises that integrative counselling looks at the whole person, taking into account mental, physical and emotional needs and the therapist uses techniques and tools from different modalities to tailor an individual approach for their client.

The course also aims to accommodate the personal and professional challenges of being a counsellor through reflective practice and original contribution to the field via research and a dissertation.

Course Learning Outcomes

At the end of the course, students are able to demonstrate:

- 1 A systematic and empirically-informed understanding of Relational theory in the provision of a professional practice approach to counselling.
- 2 A critical understanding and reflexive ability to integrate a range of theoretical approaches into a coherent model of practice.
- 3 The capabilities to integrate and synthesise theoretical and experiential knowledge into a reflective practice approach necessary for critically engaging with diversity, anti-oppressive practice and contemporary social issues in professional counselling and related settings.
- 4 A critical understanding of professional standards from a range of relevant disciplines to take an evidenced-based view on how to work competently with complex psychotherapeutic issues and meet recognised training requirements.
- 5 The ability to work independently or with groups, to problem solve, generate and communicate research-based evidence that supports best practice in the counselling field.
- 6 A reflective and critical awareness of the ethical and professional considerations in counselling research.

Teaching and Learning Activities

Learning and teaching activities consist of a mix of tutorials, group and individual activities, workshops and case study analysis, where students are given opportunities to relate the material covered to the workplace. The teaching and learning style is student-centred and an inclusive environment is created in which students learn by sharing their own and their peers experience through the development of critical reflection, dialogue and debate. The group agrees a code of conduct, which respects and values the individuals within the group, whilst taking responsibility for their own psychological safety. This is further enhanced through students developing the core conditions of empathy, congruence and unconditional positive regard, as described by Carl Rogers.

As part of the course, students undertake a placement of 100 hours of supervised practice with adult clients (aged over 16). Students undertake external training supervision that meets BACP requirements. Students also undertake at least 20 hours of external personal therapy, which provides students with first-hand experience as a client, and they can then link this insight back to their theoretical grounding and research. Placements, external supervisors and personal therapists are taken from a University approved list. Students also attend internal supervision as part of the Therapeutic Process and Supervision module.

There is an emphasis on the practical application of theory to a working environment and on the opportunity for students to think about, discuss, and where possible, relate theory to practice. Students gain an understanding of Relational framework theory and practice and learn how to apply their therapeutic counselling and psychotherapy skills with clients. Through supervised practice, students identify their strengths and areas for development, ensuring they become a capable and self-reflective practitioner.

Students are taught alongside the students on the Diploma HE Therapeutic Counselling Skills (level 5) course. Learning and teaching activities are sometimes differentiated from the level 5 students to support the development of level 7 academic skills and formative and summative assessments.
