Professional Accreditation or Recognition Associated with the Course

The course is not a professional accredited course or a counselling training course. Students will be holders of the professionally-accredited Postgraduate Diploma Counselling and Psychotherapy or similar award.

Course Overview

Aims

The aim of the distance learning course is to offer students who are already counselling or psychotherapy practitioners and hold a relevant Postgraduate Diploma degree, a comprehensive 60 credit 'top-up' course in research methods and attainment of advanced theoretical research knowledge, applied research skills and techniques associated with their chosen subject area in counselling research. 'Integrative counselling' looks at the whole person, taking into account mental, physical and emotional needs and the therapist uses techniques and tools from different modalities to tailor an individual approach for their client, and therefore each student will be encouraged to consider research questions from a range of perspectives.

To maintain their professional registration, counsellors can participate in professional accreditation/registration schemes, attain a thorough training in an evidence based approach, and show commitment to continued professional development, including research. The course aims to accommodate these personal and professional challenges of being a counsellor, through reflective practice and original contribution to the field via research and completion of a dissertation.

Course Learning Outcomes

At the end of the course, students are able to:

- 1 Demonstrate a reflective and critical awareness of the ethical and professional problems to which psychotherapy and counselling research may give rise.
- 2 Integrate and synthesise knowledge, theories and concepts from a range of disciplines in the analysis of contemporary social issues and take a critical, evidenced-based view to determine best practice in psychotherapy and related professions.
- 3 Demonstrate the ability to work independently or in groups, to problem solve, generating and communicating research-based evidence that supports anti-discriminatory and best practice.
- 4 Demonstrate the professional capabilities and transferable skills necessary for employment in psychotherapy and related settings and application of inter-professional concepts to the development of professional practice.

Teaching and Learning Activities

As a distance learning course, all teaching and learning is delivered online, with asynchronous and some synchronous delivery included in the learning experience. Students access the University's Virtual are be taught via pre-recorded teaching hours, facilitated tutorials and independent study time online where recorded lectures, study material, further reading and practical exercises are readily accessible to inform their critical analysis and evaluation of current therapeutic and research practice.

Seminars and tutorials are interactive and help students to take a critical approach to their own perspectives on practice and research. They help students develop their own expertise in implementing a research project into a relevant area within the field of counselling and psychotherapy that they have judged to merit further investigation. Underpinning all online engagement are collaborative professional discussions.

Students have tutor support with tutors who oversee their progress throughout the course via facilitated tutorials, small group seminars and research supervision at different points in the course. There is potential for delivery to be organised at time allocations intended to support access from outside of GMT if required.

A sound theoretical base is established along with associated skills prior to the student undertaking their dissertation. This is delivered using a blend of activities including lectures, seminars, tutorials, group work and independent study. Students have the opportunity to engage flexibly and work with an individual dissertation supervisor.

Learning and teaching activities employed on the course are diverse and tailored to individual student needs where appropriate. In addition, students are encouraged to engage with their own personal and professional development through attendance at external events and professional workshops. The two modules require students to engage with Virtual Learning Environment activities which support and enhance learning.

Your Modules

This information is correct for students progressing through the course within standard timescales. Details of module delivery will be provided in your timetable. Both modules are core.
