Professional Accreditation or Recognition Associated with the Course

Professional Body

British Psychological Society

Accreditation/ Recognition Summary

To be eligible for the British Psychological Society's (BPS) Graduate Basis for Chartership (GBC), students must pass the empirical psychology project (Dissertation) and gain an overall pass mark of at least 50% across the entire course.

Course Overview

Aims

Psychology degrees in the UK are sought-after as the starting point for a diverse array of careers. While employers from a range of sectors value the skills and competencies that psychology students develop, many students seek a career in a Chartered area of Psychology such as Health Psychology, Clinical Psychology, Counselling Psychology, Educational Psychology, Occupational Psychology, Sports Psychology,

Neuropsychology, or Forensic Psychology. To gain entrance onto the specialised training programmes for these Chartered pathways, students need a psychology qualification offering the Graduate Basis for Chartership (GBC) from the British Psychological Society (BPS).

The MSc Psychology (Conversion Award) provides the opportunity to qualify for the GBC via a condensed programme of study for people who have not studied Psychology previously or who have completed an undergraduate degree with a psychology component not accredited by the BPS.

The programme aims to:

- Provide students with a thorough knowledge and understanding of theories, concepts and frameworks in the BPS core curriculum areas of psychology.
- Equip students with detailed knowledge and skills in both quantitative and qualitative research methods.
- Provide students with skills in critically evaluating psychological theories, concepts, and research, with a consideration of different theoretical, epistemological, ethical, cultural, and global perspectives.
- Explore understandings of the diversity of psychological functioning, and the global and sociocultural contexts of understanding the human mind, brain, behaviours, and experiences.
- Enable students to communicate research findings to others in a variety of formats, both academic and non-academic, written and verbal.
- Develop academic independence and employability through increasing evaluative and reflective skills.
- Prepare students for a career in psychology or a cognate area.

Course Learning Outcomes

At the end of the course, students will be able to:

1. Critically and systematically evaluate current research, practice and advanced scholarship in the core areas of psychology, namely cognitive, social, developmental, biological, individual differences, research methods, and conceptual and historical issues.
2. Demonstrate originality and creativity in the application of knowledge including an understanding of how new knowledge is created and synthesised across core psychology areas, and culminating in an extensive piece of independent empirical research.
3. Show competency in the analysis and interpretation of statistical and other forms of data, including employment of digital literacy skills in accessing, processing and evaluating information, ideas and evidence from a wide range of psychological sources.
4. Critically evaluate and apply, with due regard to ethical considerations, a range of methodological techniques applicable to research in psychology and make reasoned judgements regarding the implications of that critique for assessing the validity of research findings.
5. Demonstrate effective collaboration with others in academic settings and communicate complex issues and ideas in ways appropriate to specialists and non-specialists in diverse settings.
6. Engage in employability activities and accept responsibility for subsequent career and continuing professional development.

Teaching and Learning Activities

Summary

The MSc Psychology (Conversion Award) utilises a range of teaching methods and learning activities to disseminate knowledge and facilitate students' learning. The emphasis is on students to engage with these support activities and take responsibility for gaining the knowledge needed to successfully complete the course.

Students receive an on-line course handbook detailing the course and assessment structure, expectations of students, and links to relevant University information (such as regulations and policies). For each module, students receive an on-line module handbook, providing details about the module, how the module will be delivered in terms of types of teaching elements and the main topic for each unit, learning outcomes and how these outcomes will be assessed, a reading list and other material relevant to the module.

In order to deliver core knowledge, facilitate understanding of theories and concepts, and develop practical and applied skills, we employ a range of teaching methods depending on the delivery mode. These may include (as appropriate): lectures, seminars, group work, practical/laboratory classes, presentations, problem-based projects/briefs, tutorials, and on-line activities on the University's VLE (MyBeckett). Lectures and seminars will be delivered via a combination of in person and online. Where lectures are delivered online, seminars will take place in person. Additional learning resources will also be provided online via our Virtual Learning Environment. All members of staff are aware of the need for all teaching and learning contexts to be:

- i) non-discriminatory and appropriate for each student;
- ii) respectful and valuing the perspectives and experiences each individual can offer;
- iii) promoting the values and practices associated with inclusive attitudes and behaviours in others.

We expect students to also be aware of these needs. Further information can be found on the MSc Psychology course site on MyBeckett.

The course makes extensive use of MyBeckett to support face-to-face learning, and to disseminate information about modules, the course, the professional body (British Psychological Society), the discipline of Psychology, and Leeds Beckett University. Communications from the MyBeckett will include information about students' studies and any changes to practice, changes to the timing of the return of coursework etc. Students are able to access their individual, cohort and course timetables from MyBeckett as appropriate.

Module Pages on MyBeckett will normally include:

- module handbooks
- details of module assessment (including any re-assessment details)
- all lecture slides (put up on the module site before the lecture is presented unless otherwise dictated by pedagogical reasons) to improve access to module content for students
- additional reading to develop students' broader understanding of the topic areas
- seminar activities to support the face-to-face learning within seminars
- Turn-it-in for students to audit their work and submit assignments prior to formal submission to avoid plagiarism and to learn improved referencing and citation skills

- on-line discussion boards (where appropriate) to facilitate student interaction with student peers and informal learning

Your Modules

This information is correct for students progressing through the programme within standard timescales. Students who are required to undertake repeat study may be taught alternate modules which meet the overall course learning outcomes. Part time students will be supported by the course team to determine an appropriate selection of modules from the level for each year of study. Details of module delivery will be provided in your timetable.
