Course Overview

Aims

LLM International Commercial Law aims to provide students with the opportunity to examine and explore in significant depth and detail the substance, the nature and the intricacies of key aspects of modern international commercial law by looking at topical areas such as transnational sale of goods, shipping law, international commercial contracts and terms, economic security, sanctions and money laundering.

The course helps students to gain a critical understanding of the key rules regulating international commercial activities of businesses in theory and practice. This includes exploring and assessing the essence and the nature of the key legal substantive elements of international commercial contracts, forms and modes of finance and payment, as well as considering the global movements aligning the economic law in specific key areas affecting national and international economic security. The course focuses on transnational rules shaping commercial activity across multiple jurisdictions and in the global economy.

International Commercial Law module explores central aspects of modern international commercial law focusing on INCOTERMS and the character and the legal substance of the UN Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods. On the shipping law side students will examine and explore the contract of carriage of goods as well as relevant rights and duties of shippers and carriers. Students are equipped with a critical understanding of Bill of Lading, Charterparties and elements of the Hague-Visby Rules, the Hamburg Rules, the Rotterdam Rules, Multimodal Transportation and Marine Insurance.

The Global Law of Economic Security module considers the treaties and international rules initially developed in response to organised economic and trade related criminal activity, now having expanded to cover corruption, money laundering and the imposition of economic sanctions. The module critically examines these global legal movements as a response to corruption and wider economic crimes and considers the legal and regulatory techniques which have emerged, as well as the wider implications of these on both state and private economic actors.

This programme's curriculum will further refine students' knowledge of modern international commercial law and foster critical evaluation of the future direction and the dynamics of international commerce. The dissertation will give students the opportunity to pursue critical, independent research in a defined area of interest, helping students to specialise in areas relevant to their chosen career and/or field of academic interest.

The enhanced commercial awareness allied to specialist legal expertise and skills offers graduates a distinct advantage in a competitive global business environment. The course will not only be attractive to lawyers wishing to enhance their legal knowledge, but to other business and financial professionals who are working in fields where a deeper knowledge of international commercial law would be advantageous.

Course learning outcomes

At the end of the course, students will be able to:

1	Analyse, synthesise and apply knowledge of norms relating to international commercial law and the context in which such norms function.
2	Undertake complex analysis and evaluation of the efficacy of international commercial legal norms in the context of transnational sale of goods, international business contracts and economic security.

3	Critically evaluate the theoretical underpinnings of modern international commercial law – such as contemporary lex mercatoria - and show an ability to combine and apply these concepts to a complex analysis of legal problems involving issues relevant to the legal regulation of international commercial transactions.
4	Show critical application of knowledge of relevant socio-legal theories and legal research methods and demonstrate the ability to apply key concepts of international commercial law to a research question in this field.
5	Demonstrate self-direction, originality and autonomy in the production of a relevant piece of Master's level independent legal research.

Teaching and Learning Activities

Summary

The design and delivery of this course and its substantive content means that student cohorts will typically be diverse, coming from a range of social, cultural, academic and professional backgrounds and countries.

The course shares modules with other level 7 Academic LLM programmes, in particular cores for Legal Research Methods, Dissertation, and electives. There are three core 'subject' modules for this programme and the fourth is an elective students chose from the range of modules running on other LLMs.

The student community will be supported by in-person on-campus seminars and students will be encouraged to get involved with the broader Law School and Leeds Beckett community. Module delivery will be supplemented with the online recorded lectures/content whilst reading and related activities will form the foundation of the seminars.

For teaching activities, which will emphasise student-led evaluation and critique of issues, students will respond to tutor-prepared materials, tasks, problems and questions. Module materials will provide a framework which will steer students to both the knowledge and critical components of the programme. Students will be given an opportunity to relate the studied material to current issues of modern international commercial law. The variety of student body provides an important opportunity for students to learn by sharing their and their peers' experience. Indicative content and approaches for each module is articulated in the respective module specification. For each module there are arrangements for individual and group feedback on student activities.

The Legal Research Methods module will provide students with founding knowledge about various legal research methods and how to use these in the Master's level research. The dissertation is an exercise in independent student learning, involving sustained research and a substantial piece of writing which is supported by both the dissertation Module Leader and an individual dissertation supervisor. The supervisor will guide the student on the planning and execution of the dissertation, the development of ideas, organisation and structure of the work. The preparation of the dissertation will require students to become involved with issues at the forefront of the disciplines concerned with this programme.
